"I wish I could let them know in person that I'm really thankful to them that they helped me with the wood. Because it is really hard to get wood around here, and when that came, it was really cold, so I was really happy."

"Blankets are always really useful, and food is especially helpful when a storm is coming. I'm just grateful because it's expensive here. The price of everything went up after the pandemic. One collar costs $14 at the local hardware store. A small bag of food is $36. I work full time and still don't buy those."

- Janice Doney

Service Spotlight

During the winter, many Elders living in remote Tribal lands lack access to resources like food and fuel for heating their homes. We offer the Winter Fuel service to support Native Elders by providing firewood. Through this service, Elders receive one cord of wood – chopped and delivered to the Elder, eliminating the need for them to plan for travel and delivery.

Thank You!

We're so grateful for your ongoing support and friendship — it means the world to us. These numbers are just a glimpse of what your generosity has made possible. Because of you, Elders, children, families, and even animals on remote Native American reservations are finding hope and help when they need it most.
